Claims 5, 6, 8 and 10-13 are rejected under the judicially created doctrine of obviousness-type double patenting as being unpatentable over claims 1-7 of U.S. Patent No. Hjernevik in view of Haram.

Hjernevik discloses cooling and preservation of fish. This process uses the ammonium salts of formic and also can include the double or di-tetra salts (column 2, lines 29-30 and 46-48). This process is described as better than the former process because the former process included acetic acid, which is corrosive and causes "etching" in the workers (column 1, lines 44-46). The claims appear to differ from the reference in the inclusion of glycerol. Haram teaches that glycerol is a well known cooling liquid for fish that is used at levels of about 3%. Since the purpose of the Hjernevik process is to preserve fish, it would have been obvious to include glycerol in the composition as a partial substitute for the formic acid cooling agent since both of these compounds are known ingredients for use in cooling liquids in fish products.

Claims 7 and 9 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
